GEELONG & MELBOURNE RAILWAY

See report of Andrew Clarke - Surveyor General 1856. Pages XI - XIII and Appendix Lll, pp 244 - 248.

Extract from report of T. Higinbotham, Engineer in Chief, dated 31st October 1862:

"On the Geelong and Melbourne Railway, which became the property of the Government in September 1860, considerable repairs have been effected. A very large part of the sleepers were quite rotten; these have been removed and replaced with sound sleepers; the embankments have been raised in several places where they were below the level of floods, and additional openings for the passage of the flood waters have been made. Tenders have been invited for a new pier at Geelong; the present pier, which was built of bad timber, is now quite rotten, and having been placed in the shallowest water, is, from that cause alone, useless. The plans and specifications for the widening of the line between Geelong and West Geelong are nearly ready, and tenders will be called for shortly."

Extract from report of T. Higinbotham, Engineer in Chief, dated 31st May 1864:

"Since my report dated 31st October 1862, a large number of culverts have been built on the Geelong and Melbourne Railway, providing an additional waterway for the escape of floods; the bridge over Skeleton Creek, which was built by the Geelong and Melbourne Railway Company, and had been swept away by a flood, has been rebuilt with stone and iron and a large addition to the waterway, which the old bridge provided, has been made. The line from Geelong to West Geelong junction has been doubled, and the old railway pier, which both from its position and construction was useless, has been replaced by a new pier, carried into deep water, and of substantial construction."

Extracts from report dated 3rd April 1865 by T. Higinbotham, Engineer in Chief, for year ended 31st December 1864:

"The bridge at Skeleton Creek was completed, and that at Kororoit Creek commenced; but the bridges at the Duck Ponds and at Cowies Creek have not been commenced; owing to want of funds, and the line at these points is carried on temporary supports only. The bridges at Little River and the Werribee will shortly require extensive repairs to place them in a state of security."

"During the past year, several additional culverts have been built on the Geelong and Melbourne Railway, to afford a passage for the floods, from which that line has suffered so severely." Extract from report of T. Higinbotham, Engineer in Chief, for year ended 31st December 1865: (12th April 1866)

"The new bridge over Kororoit Creek, on the Geelong and Melbourne Railway, which is mentioned in my report of 3rd April 1865, as having been commenced, was proceeded with and nearly completed during that year. Considerable difficulties were experienced in getting in the foundations, causing much delay."
